Chile believes that National plans are key to the effective implementation of the Agreement.

National plans represent an important challenge of standardization of measurement and commitments on the part of the States. This requires criteria of uniformity and transparency.

Regarding the wording in the Zero Draft:

Chile agrees with what is established in numeral 2, on the communication of the national plan to the governance body, within a determined period of time through the Secretariat when this instrument enters into force.

With respect to numeral 4, Chile sees value in the wording in this matter, because it leaves an opportunity for a Party to, at any time, adjust its national plan with a view to improving its level of ambition, in accordance with the guidelines adopted by the governance body.

In this sense, Chile proposed the following modification:

A Party may incorporate at any time new measures into its national plan with a view to enhancing its level of ambition, in accordance with guidance adopted by the governing body.

This wording makes it possible to encourage the incorporation of new measures into the national plan presented by a State at any time with a view to increasing its level of ambition. In that sense, it would not just be “adjusting” - as mentioned in the initial text - but it leaves open the option of incorporating new measures and actions that allow the national plan to be complemented in a constructive and positive manner.
